"THE 'FEEL' OF INDIA..."

"This lush and sensational tale reeks with exotic Indian atmosphere. The heat and the dust and the stench, the swarming life and gaudy colors and flamboyant drama are all here. It all makes a grandly bizarre background for his bloody and brutal story.

"Masters has said he tried to put the 'feel' of India into NIGHTRUNNERS OF BENGAL. In this he has succeeded."

TO KEEP OR KILL

WILSON TUCKER

H is for HORSE

By RALPH TOWNSEND

Rocky Morris woke with a start, sweat dripping from his and making the room. His body trembled. His eyelids burned and pained and he was filled with a brutal apprehension.

Fully awake now, he wondered where he was. The room was dim and everything in it was unfamiliar. He knew somehow that he had never been in it before. He laid the cover over his morning pocket through a gap in the drawn shade.

He remembered the scene. What had made him dream? Or had he dreamed at all? The dream came back to him and that was it. The dream. He'd dreamed only in a dream and really he was not here.

Suddenly, he thought of the night and at once was in a room. Maybe he'd drunk it all up during the night. He had groped under the bed with his finger, traced the neck of a bottle. He stood it, saw the whiskey in it and it was over on page 401.

He didn't care about the girl or the hot music. He was in a bad way and only one thing would help him drive away the screaming memories.
